Conclusions

The downscaled GCM simulations reproduce the rainfall probability reasonably well. The rainfall indices that were indicative of rainfall occurrence were better modeled compared to those indicative of rainfall intensity. In general, the projected station rainfall changes driven by the 13 GCMs show remarkable inter-model variations.

Acknowledgements

This research is supported by Malaysia government UKM-ST-08-FRGS0008-2010. We acknowledge the World Climate Research Programme (WCRP), World Meteorological Organisation (WMO) and Asia-Pacific Network for Global Change Research (APN) for providing the travel grant.

Reference